Dr. John Paul Nuño was born and raised in the Central Valley of California. As a second generation Mexican American, he developed an interest in border themes and issues. After graduating from the University of Texas-El Paso in 2010, he was hired in the Department of History at California State University, Northridge. At CSUN, Dr. Nuño teaches courses in American Indian History, Borderlands History, and Colonial America. In 2019, he was a Kluge Fellow at the Library of Congress where he conducted research for his manuscript tentatively titled, “The Wild Ones: Contesting and Negotiating Power in the Florida Borderlands, 1763-1842.”
